Student Club/Organization Advisory Support Statement

The college recognizes the importance of student involvement and supports the mission of our student organizations to provide opportunities for leadership, idea sharing, and experiential learning. Advisors are crucial in providing support for student groups. The following outlines the role of the advisor in a student organization.

1. Advisors are volunteers. A Columbia State club/organization advisor must be an employee of the college.
2. Advisors do not control the clubs, but instead they offer recommendations or suggestions in compliance with college policies, rules, and guidelines. As arenas for learning and development, students are expected to take responsibility for their own actions.
3. Advisors are of utmost importance in a community college setting because of the length of attendance of the typical student. Student leaders may only spend one to two years at the college, which can sometimes leave the fate of our clubs at the hands of our advisors. Advisors are encouraged to support their organization members in the recruitment of new members and officers each year to promote longevity of the club or organization.

This document is for initial recognition purposes. Any change in advisory roles should be reported as an update to the office of Student Services once the request for recognition has been approved.
